Driving on a long road, the GPS suddenly went out. No reception. It's strange not having some voice telling you what to do and having to go forward without an original plan. With nobody on the road in front of me, behind me, or anywhere, a fork in the road came up. Uh-oh.

We are so used to having other people influence us – for the good or the bad – and not really having to think for ourselves. There's nothing wrong with inspiration, but original ideas seem to be lacking lately. Are we comfortable with the uncertainty or inconvenience of trusting our own inner GPS? How can we prepare our heart for the day or situation upon us? Where do we look to for guidance, for information, for answers to choices to be made?

Google it! In this case, though, God is our Google. Message God asking for guidance throughout the day and share your joy and gratitude. Send a quick mental text in the form of prayer saying "THX" or "LOL". Our gadgets can be very useful tools in the material world, but not all information in the digital world is the truth. As humans, we must remember that we are spiritual beings and must GPS our way through interactions with people on a more personal level. Google God's guidance asking for good "connections" to our world encounters and relationships. Ask what is fair and just. Ask for a "reset" when things aren't working so well. Sometimes the connection may be slow, but you'll always get a result. This particular GPS will always have perfect reception!

And, BTW, the "e" in God's email stands for Eternal...and the wireless is free!

Clancy's Cackles

What animal is best at hitting a ball? A bat.

What race is never run? A swimming race.

Why can't Cinderella play soccer?

Because she's always running away from the ball.
