

Jake's Jabbers

This season the lighting seems luminous, dramatic cloud formations, fluorescent greens, magnified rainbow colors of flower power, scents of those weird things growing in the corner of the yard, birds chirping and flitting along, all seem the more intensified this beautiful season. My paws even feel like they're sinking into cotton balls outside on the grass!

Perhaps one reason could be that many folks I care about have life challenges staring them in the eye. Is this particular season's intensity a cause and effect of more appreciation for the newness of life? Or of facing mortality? Is it the cyclical bittersweet pendulum of remembrances— a back and forth emotionally-filled season? Retirement, Birthdays, Mother's Day, Memorial Day, Cinco de Mayo, Anniversaries, First Communion, Confirmation, and Graduation— all essentially allow a door to open ahead of you or close behind you. Coming through or going forward, they are our individual journeys of life, affecting our whole being and transforming us into special new spirits. Like the extreme senses of this season awakening, the soul is nudged into feeling the depth of appreciation and unconditional love shared for those we care about, wherever they may be. What a gift they have gently bestowed on us.

See, hear, smell, feel, and touch the life around you; appreciate, forgive, remember, accept, and love the soul within. Celebrate the new spirit all around and deep down inside you, crank up that volume on life and enjoy the new "spring" in your step!

What is the best day to go to the beach?

SUNDAY

Why do bananas use sunscreen?

They peel easily!

Why are spiders such good swimmers?

They have webbed feet!
